SUMMARY

Project manager who keeps complex, document-heavy work on track. My earliest projects were literally this job: at the Humanitarian OpenStreetMap Team, I helped determine mapping priorities and coordinate implementation for disaster-preparedness projects; at Cadasta, I helped prioritize and implement land-registry mapping projects documenting resource rights for communities that lacked formal records. Since then, across roles in enterprise consulting, geospatial risk, and marketing technology, I've stayed the person who maintains the trackers, flags the risks early, writes the documentation other people actually use, and keeps a high volume of overlapping projects moving without anything falling through the cracks. I'm energized by a full task list, not overwhelmed by one, and I care a great deal about work that helps people as effectively as possible.
