RE: DEVELOPMENT COORDINATOR

Hi Becca (and team),

I'm excited to apply for the Development Coordinator position with Roaring Fork Outdoor Volunteers.

Throughout my career, I've helped organizations build reliable data systems, communicate with people in meaningful ways, and create processes that keep the behind-the-scenes running smoothly. Outside of work, I've spent just as many years building trails, teaching outdoor education, coaching mountain biking, and volunteering in the communities that care for our public lands. RFOV is one of the few organizations where those two parts of my experience naturally come together.

I've spent more than fifteen years building the kinds of systems development teams rely on: CRM databases, customer segmentation, reporting dashboards, email campaigns, and clean, reliable data that supports meaningful relationships. I enjoy bringing order to complexity—organizing messy information, improving data quality, building reports that help guide decisions, and creating processes that people trust. Most recently, I partnered with Sunlight Ski & Bike in Glenwood Springs to clean and standardize thousands of inconsistent customer and product records, improving reporting and creating a stronger foundation for future marketing and business decisions.

Communication has always been just as important as the data itself. I've written email campaigns, newsletters, landing pages, and marketing communications that reached thousands of recipients while improving engagement and inspiring action. I enjoy translating information into stories that help people feel connected to a mission, whether that's encouraging a customer to support a local business or inviting someone to become part of something bigger than themselves.

My connection to stewardship extends well beyond my professional experience. I participated in HMI's inaugural gap year program as an RMS XVler, taught outdoor education courses at Colgate University, spent summers working on trail crews in the White Mountains, and now serve as a PMBIA-certified mountain bike coach. Some of my favorite days are still the ones spent maintaining trails alongside volunteers or helping someone discover the confidence to explore the outdoors.

What resonates most about RFOV is your belief that conservation happens through community. You don't simply ask people to support public lands—you invite them to care for them. Volunteers swinging tools on a trail, students learning through stewardship, donors seeing the direct impact of their support—those are the kinds of connections that create lasting conservation. I would be proud to help build and strengthen those relationships through thoughtful communication, organized systems, and reliable data.

I enjoy making complicated things feel simple, whether that's organizing a database, planning an event, writing a fundraising email, or building dashboards that help teams make better decisions. Just as importantly, I enjoy helping people feel connected to a cause they can feel good about. The opportunity to combine those skills in support of RFOV's mission is exactly the kind of work I've been hoping to find.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I'd love the opportunity to discuss how my background in CRM management, communications, analytics, and community engagement could help support RFOV's fundraising and stewardship efforts.

Sincerely,

Katrina Engelsted
