RE: DEVELOPMENT COORDINATOR

Dear Becca,

One thing that immediately caught my attention about this role wasn't the job description—it was learning about your connection to High Mountain Institute. HMI played an important role in my life, and my sister, who serves on the alumni council, recently told me about your work expanding the school's gap program. I participated in one of HMI's early summer gap trips in the San Juans, and it reminded me how small and connected the HMI community is. More importantly, it reminded me how much HMI shaped the way I think about stewardship. Reading about RFOV felt like a natural continuation of those values.

I've always been happiest when my work connects people with the outdoors. At Colgate, that meant teaching whitewater canoeing, backpacking, and trail maintenance. Today, it means coaching mountain biking. As a PMBIA-certified coach, I recruit riders, organize clinics, and help people build confidence on the trail. Watching someone discover what they're capable of—and seeing the community that grows around those experiences—is one of the most rewarding parts of what I do. It's easy to imagine bringing that same energy to RFOV's volunteers and events.

Professionally, I've spent the last fifteen years helping organizations bring order to complexity. I've built customer data systems, marketing programs, and reporting tools for companies like Lytics, Homebot, and Zayo, where I worked in Salesforce, including Einstein and Marketing Cloud. I enjoy creating organized systems that help people do their best work, whether that's maintaining a CRM, coordinating fundraising campaigns, producing reports, or making sure the details don't get missed.

Conservation has always been the common thread. I worked on the National Park Service's Digital Maps team, supporting geospatial projects for our public lands, and found my stride volunteering with organizations like the Humanitarian OpenStreetMap Team, Cadasta, and the Bonobo Conservation Initiative. Those experiences showed me how technology can support conservation and communities, and they've continued to shape the work I choose to pursue.

I'm currently based in Boulder but previously lived in Glenwood Springs and would be excited to move back to the Roaring Fork Valley. My partner lived there for nearly ten years, and we've talked often about returning. The chance to combine my experience in operations, technology, and outdoor leadership with a mission I genuinely believe in feels like a rare opportunity.

Thank you for considering my application. I'd love the opportunity to talk about how I can contribute to RFOV—and to help more people discover the satisfaction that comes from caring for the places they love.

Warmly,

Katrina Engelsted
